| 研究課題名 | Safety FirstProject: An investigation into student awareness and experiences of harassment and sexual or physical abuse off-campus | | | | | |
| 実施内容・研究成果の要旨 (概要書を別途添付) | This project aimed to evaluate student awareness of off-campus harassment, especially sexual or physical abuse, and initiate a “Safety First” campaign to create a safer, more student-friendly environment around the University of Kitakyushu. The research involved three stages, (1) an online survey, (2) workshops that brought together students and faculty, and (3) focus groups to discuss potential solutions. More than 700 students responded to the survey with over half (58%) reporting incidents of off-campus harassment. Women reported ten times the number of incidents as men, with higher rates in every category – especially verbal abuse and physical assault. In total, five percent of women reported traumatizing sexual assaults, with those most commonly occurring near student accommodation. Regarding awareness of student services, fifty percent of respondents reported knowing “nothing” about the university’s anti-harassment policies or where to report such problems. Conversely, the workshops and focus groups were effective in producing concrete, student-lead proposals for improving support services at the university. The findings were collated into posters and leaflets for dissemination on campus, and presented at relevant academic conferences. The research is due for publication as a monograph with Candlin & Mynard (Tokyo). | | | | | |
